THE BOY WHO TURNED OUT BAD. The boy that turned out bad was raised by parents good and true; They pondered what was best for him, and what they ought to do, And when at last decided they would keep him home at night.

So he could not take part in all the other boys' delights. They never let him play with boys who went in their bare feet. They kept him from the swimming hole and kept him off the street.

He never had a single fight, and on all Hallows' eve He with the other little boys was never, never seen.

He never stole an apple from a neighbor's apple tree, Because his mother's eagle eye was on him constantly.

He never saw a "show," because his parents always said They didn't want extravagance in Tommy to be bred.

But when he grew up into years, he sighed one day: "I see The very sweetest joys in life have been denied to me."

And all the penit-up spirit of the fellow broke and ran. And what is mischief in a boy is criminal in man.

MRS. LIZZIE FORMAN MARSHALL.

The announcement of the death of this good woman told of a loss that can never be repaired, of a sorrow which only Heaven can heal. As wife, mother, relative, friend and neighbor, in all the relations of her life, so faithfully, so cheerfully, was industry met and fulfilled that all who came in contact with her felt her sweetening influence.

The home which she brightened and guided for more than half a century has now only the precious memory of her self-sacrificing life, her untiring devotion to her loved ones and to those in the sphere of her life. It was often said of her by those who knew her best that she had never drawn a selfish breath; all her energies were devoted to the happiness of those around her.

Not was the light of her life shed only in her own household; it extended through a wide circle of kindred and friends. Of her it may be truly said that "Her children rise up and call her blessed, and her husband says, and she praiseth her." She died in the hope of a blessed resurrection and dwelling in her Father's home. May her husband and her sons be supported by the hope of a joyful reunion, as they will surely be comforted by the fragrance of a life which has ended on earth only to bloom forever in Heaven.
